PEER BUDDYING PROGRAM

Teaching peers is one of the best ways to develop mastery. - Jeff Atwood

Peer Buddying Program is an initiative by the Department of Counselling Psychology, Loyola College. This program provides an opportunity to the students of the Department with the ability to be an active listener, encourage the peer to perform well in academics, facilitate an effective learning process and strongly reflect responsibility of the peer's academic performance. This program was introduced in the department as a part of knowledge sharing and also to enhance the social skills and interpersonal responsiveness of the students.

Peer Buddies are individuals who belong to the same age group or social group and hold equal levels of responsibility. No specialized training is generally required to be a peer buddy. They will share an informal and flexible space of learning, teaching and holding responsibility for the academic performance of the peer.

The role of the peer buddy is to help their pair aspire to reach their full potential; facilitate collaboration in academic pursuits, case presentations, projects and seminars; to provide mutual guidance and support to ensure personal and professional growth for each other.

Expected Outcomes of Peer Buddying Program:

- For the Peer Buddy: Improved self-confidence and self-reflection; professional development; acquiring skills of providing guidance and problem solving, Improved interpersonal communication, Improved responsibility
- For the Department: Instilling personal skills and professional skills in the students.
